DRIVE TIME

Continue the internal assembly for your DeLorean by installing a very important component.

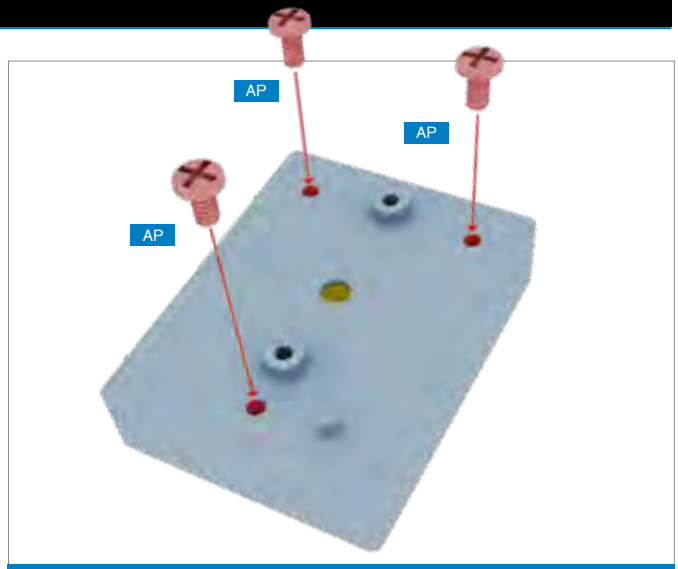

In this issue you will fit the flux capacitor – which makes time travel possible – by following these step-by-step instructions.

THE FLUX CAPACITOR

STEP 1 ›› Push the flux capacitor (piece 58B) into the back of the case 58C as shown, aligning the posts and holes.

STEP 2 ›› Fix the flux capacitor in place with three AP screws in the holes shown.

STEP 3 ›› Fix the cover 58A onto the case with two AP screws in the holes shown.

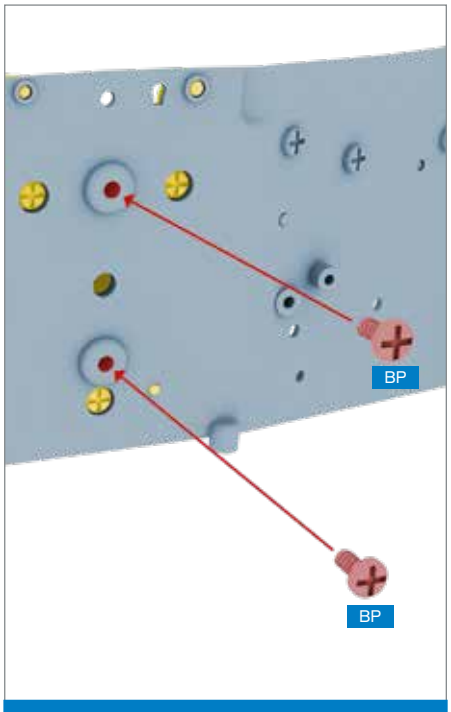

STEP 4 ›› Push the case into position on the upper bulkhead assembly as shown, by aligning the posts and holes.

STEP 5 ›› Push pipe 58D into place, connecting the case to the bulkhead.

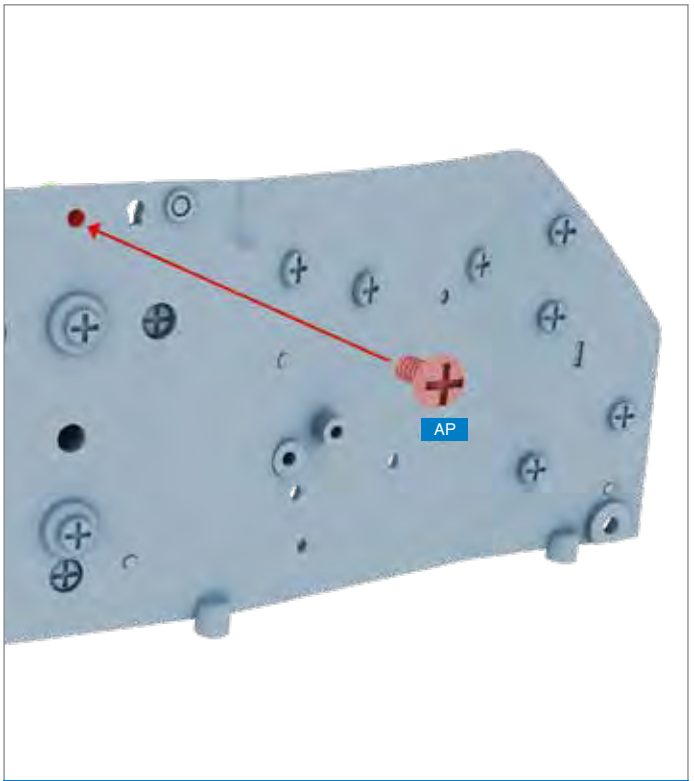

STEP 6 ›› Push pipe 58G into place on the other side of the case, as shown..

STEP 7 ›› Fix the case in place with two BP screws from the other side.

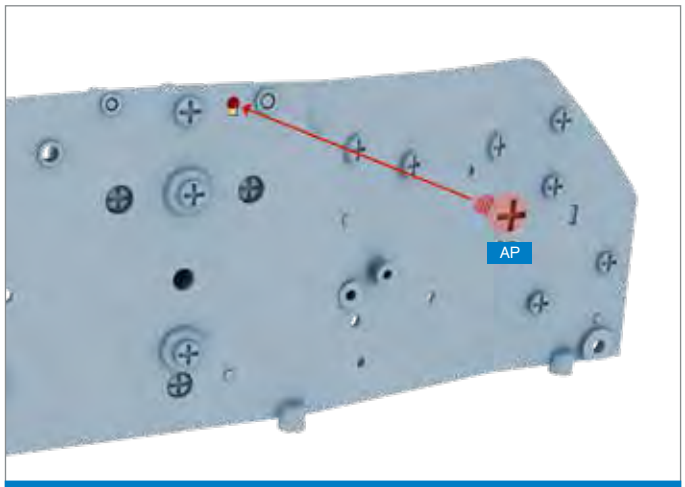

STEP 8 ›› Fix pipe 58E in place on the bulkhead in the position shown by aligning the posts and the holes.

STEP 9 ›› Fix piece 58E in place with an AP screw from the other side of the bulkhead.

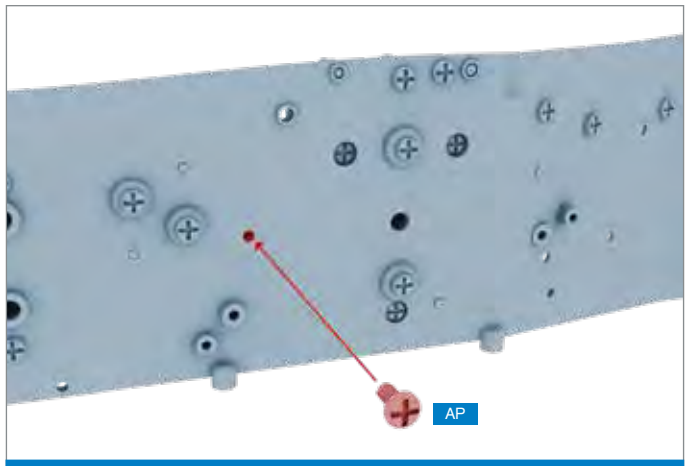

STEP 10 ›› Push pipe 58F in place as shown, connecting the flux capacitor case to the bulkhead.

STEP 11 ›› From the other side of the bulkhead, fix the pipe in position with an AP screw in the hole shown.

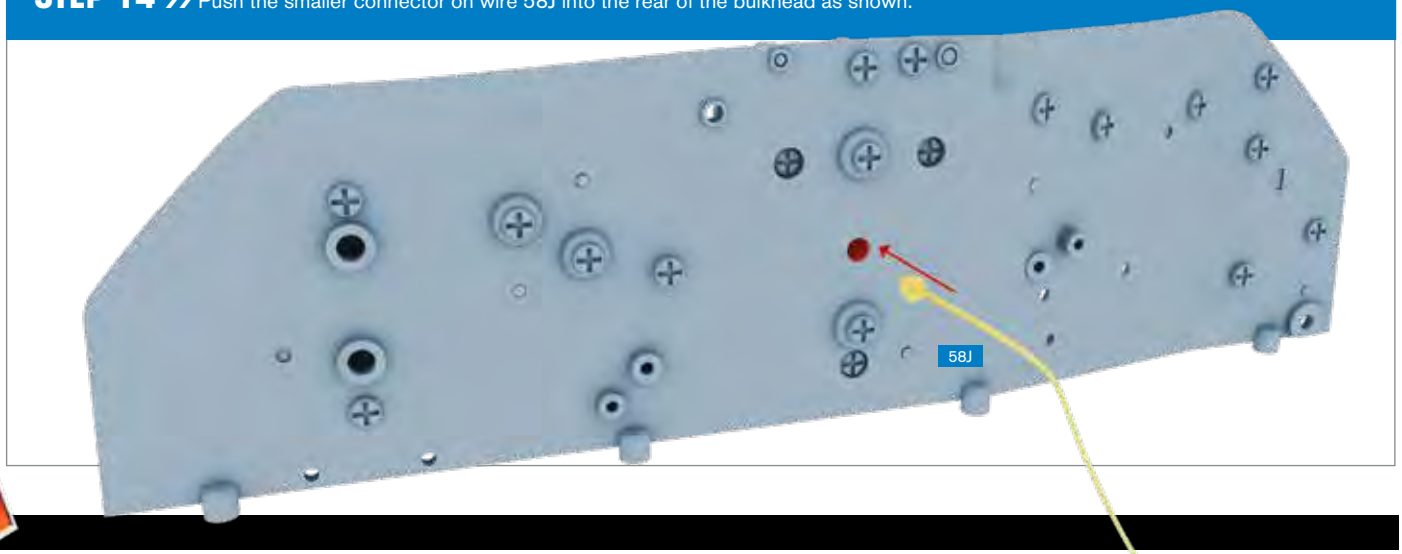

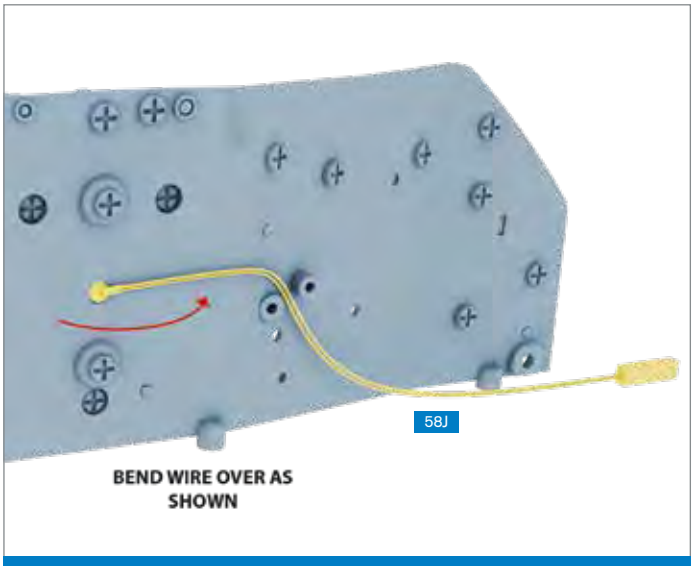

STEP 12 ›› Push pipe 58H in place as shown, connecting the flux capacitor case to the bulkhead.

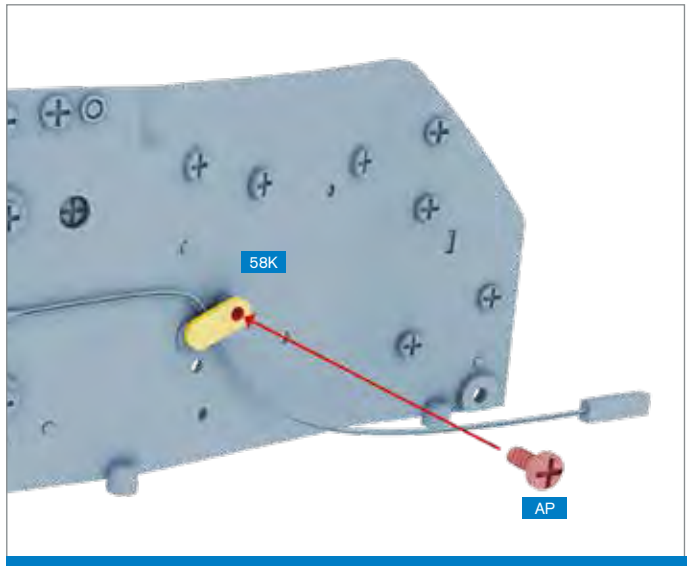

STEP 13 ›› From the other side of the bulkhead, fix the pipe in position with an AP screw in the hole shown.

STEP 14 ›› Push the smaller connector on wire 58J into the rear of the bulkhead as shown.

STEP 15 ›› Bend the wire 58J over and position it between the posts as shown.

STEP 16 ›› Fix the tab 58K in place with an AP screw in the hole shown, holding the wire in place.

NEW LOOK FOR DOC

PRODUCTION DIARY

To save Christopher Lloyd from lengthy sessions in the make-up chair, Doc Brown was rejuvenated for the Back to the Future sequels!

FLASHBACK
Christopher Lloyd and Michael J. Fox in Back to the Future. For the 1985 scenes, Lloyd was made up to look at least 20 years older than his real age.

When Christopher Lloyd was cast as Doc Brown in Back to the Future in 1984, he was 45 years old. Doc was supposed to be at least in his sixties, so Lloyd had old-age make-up added for all the scenes set in the present. Lloyd didn't object – he had appeared in heavy prosthetic make-up to play the Klingon Commander in Star Trek III: The Search for Spock and felt that make-up was all part of creating the character. "I'm willing to put up with whatever it takes to get me there," he admitted, even though the make-up session for Doc was over three hours.

However, as Robert Zemeckis and Bob Gale planned the sequels, it became clear that the older version of Doc would be on-screen for the majority of the time. The make-up sessions for Lloyd would be double or triple the amount for the first film, both time-consuming and tedious. Also, Gale was planning to introduce a love interest for

REJUVENATED
Christopher Lloyd beams as the youthful Doc, who has visited a rejuvenation clinic. The actor was spared lengthy make-up sessions by Doc's 'new look'.

Doc in the Wild West segment in the form of Clara Clayton (Mary Steenburgen) and wanted this romance to continue with them living 'happily ever after'. Thankfully, as this was a science fiction movie, almost anything was possible...

So, when Doc arrives in 2015, he apologises to Marty for wearing a disguise and peels a layer of latex from his face. He has been, he explains, to a 'rejuvenation clinic'. "I got an all-natural overhaul," he says. "They took out some wrinkles, did a hair repair, changed the blood – added a good thirty or forty years to my life. They also replaced my spleen and colon."

Bob Gale felt it was important to have Doc explain specifically that the treatment had added decades to his life, so that later when he ends up with Clara, the audience knows that they will have many happy years together.

Filming this small sequence was a daunting experience for Lloyd, however. First of all, he had to be made-up as he was for the first film, then he had to peel off the latex while delivering his dialogue. "I had all kinds of trepidation about that scene," Lloyd recalled. "The latex is thin and it can tear easily. Then you'd have to do it all over again, which would mean at least another two or three hours putting on another layer. I had to talk through it, a lot of hyper-energized stuff as I was taking it off. The odds were not great."

FACE OFF

Happily, the scene was achieved in one take, and though Zemeckis had arranged a contingency plan if Lloyd needed to have the make-up reapplied, this was not needed. "I remember catching a piece of latex in my mouth but I carried on talking. It came off in one piece! I don't think Bob Zemeckis ever expected that." Lloyd tops off the scene with the broadest grin as he shows off his new look. It's not difficult to imagine that more than a little of Doc's delight came from the actor's relief in the knowledge that he wouldn't be spending so long in the make-up chair... ■

CHANGING TIMES

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY

Marty and Doc Brown witness the power of time travel as they watch the newspaper headlines change before their eyes.

As Griff Tannen and his bionic hoverboard posse are marched away by the Hill Valley police – after crashing into the Courthouse Mall in a 'No Hoverboarding' area – Marty is reunited with Doc Brown. Doc has the next day's copy of USA Today, which is the reason that Marty and the Doc came to 2015 in the first place – the headline announces 'Marty McFly Junior Arrested for Theft'. Marty snatches the paper excitedly. "Doc, look at this! It's changing!"

Indeed, before their eyes, the picture on the newspaper dissolves and reforms. Gone is the scene of Marty Junior's arrest, replaced by the snarling face of Griff Tannen, even as the events are taking place. The headline now reads 'Hoverboard Rampage Destroys Courthouse'.

"Yes! Yes... of course!" says Doc delightedly, checking the scene across the square through his futuristic binoculars, "Because this hoverboard incident has now occurred, Griff now goes to jail. Therefore your son won't go with him tonight and the robbery will never take place. Thus history – future history – has now been altered, and this is the proof! Marty, we've succeeded – not exactly as I planned but no matter, let's go get Jennifer and go home!"

Getting home, however, proves more tricky than they expect... ■

Above: The future news of Marty Junior's arrest is obliterated by events in the present – Marty watches as the headline about his son is replaced by news of Griff and his gang being hauled away.

QUICK FACTS!

MAKING THE NEWS

- The 'Newsline' section of the paper (for October 22nd 2015) seen in this sequence provides a wealth of detail about the world of the future. One headline reads 'Man killed by falling litter thrown from hovering vehicle', another says 'Pitcher suspended for bionic arm use'.
- The paper also reveals that the American president in 2015 is female – the headline reads 'President says she's tired... of reporters asking the same questions'.
- The newspaper report of the arrest gives the full names and ages of the hoverboard gang. As well as Griff Tannen (19), they are Leslie O'Malley (18), Chester Nogura (18) and Rafe Unger (19), all from Hill Valley.
